CARDIGAN ---- Synopsis

©CIL 17655

MAR 18 1922

"CARDIGAN" opens in and around the historical spot of Johnstown. It starts with a love romance between young Michael Cardigan, an unwilling desciple of the king, and "Silver Heels," the adopted ward of the English Governor.

The Love of the two youngsters senses the outbreak of the Revolutionary War and shows the events, which led up to that famous day in history April 18, 1776. Young Cardigan, who befriends the Indian tribes of Mahawk and Cayuga, almost meets death by being burned at the stake. He is saved by an Indian runner. Cardigan, is torn from his sweetheart and later enters Lexington, and is admitted to the secret councils of the Minute Men. He hears the silver tongued Patrick Henry utter the famous words "Give me liberty or give me death," he sees the great John Hancock, the man who signed his name to the Declartion of Independence, and meets with Paul Revere, the man who roused the farmers to fight for freedom.

During the meeting of the minute men the cry is heard "The British Are Coming," Paul Revere has cleared the British blockade and has reached the Charlestown Shore. He watches for the signal in the Old North Church, "One, if by land, and two if by sea." He sees the first light, then sees the second, and rides like a made man through the town. The never to be forgotten call to arms is portrayed so vividly on the screen, is so sensational and patriotic that it rouses an audience to the greatest heights of excitement. Then the battles start. The Battle of Lexington, the Battle of Concord, and the retreat of the British Army.
